SEA COMMUNICATION

Spell a coded message using maritime flags

This mission belongs to

People put flags on their boats and ships to send important messages about safety and navigation.

The flags they use follow a special code called the International Code of Signals.

This code has been around for a long time and helps sailors talk to each other when they don't speak the same language.

It's like a secret language using flags! By using different flags, sailors can say things like "I need help" or "Let's communicate."

It's a helpful way for them to keep safe while they're out on the water.
